Gives No Definite Promise On Israel

The United States hopes to recognize Israel as a full-fledged nation within the next few weeks, Secretary of State Marshall said in Washington at a news conference. The ultimate decision would lie with the White House, but he left no doubt that full diplomatic status would be granted to the new Government of Israel soon after an October election is held in that country.

Although Secretary Marshall had believed the election would be held Oct. 1, the Israeli mission later received word from Tel Aviv that it would occur in mid-November.

Already, "de facto" recognition of Israel has been extended by the United States, but there has been a delay in broadening this to "de jure," or legal recognition. As it now is, Eliahu Epstein is in Washington as the special representative of the Provisional Government of Israel. But under de jure recognition Mr. Epstein would presumably become a fully accredited diplomatic representative, with a corresponding number sent from the United States to the new nation.

The Secretary indicated that it would be premature to grant complete recognition in advance of an election to be held in Israel under the United Nations partition plan. But when he spoke of the "election," a room filled with correspondents broke into laughter, in view of the coming Presidential contest in the United States. The Secretary grinned and amplified his reference to the "election".

A reporter brought up the subject of de jure recognition, during the questioning at the conference. Secretary Marshall said, yes, the matter of de jure recognition was ing very carefully considered, d, it was a matter of timing, [illegible] up, [illegible] and w[illegible]

[illegible] New [illegible] mean, Mr. [illegible] have decided [illegible] but have not decided what [illegible] to do it?" he was asked.

The Secretary replied that the Government hoped it could find it proper to recognize the Israeli Government in a de jure fashion, but the matter and final decision would have to be concerned with timing, because it had to do with the election.

"You refer to the Israeli election," a reporter asked, as laughter sounded throughout the hall.

As the conference closed, Secretary Marshall laughingly declined to be drawn into further comments.

Asks Churches To End Anti-Semitism

The World Council of Churches meeting in Amsterdam, The Netherlands, called on its 150 member bodies in forty-four countries to denounce anti-Semitism as "absolutely irreconcilable with the profession and practice of the Christian faith and a "sin against God and man."

In voting to receive a report by its Committee on the "Christian Approach to the Jews," the Council severely criticized the Christian church for its continuing failure to stamp out the image of the Jews as the sole enemies of Christ."

"We must acknowledge in all humility," said the report, "that too often we have failed to manifest Christian love toward our Jewish neighbors and have failed to fight with all our strength the age-old disorder of man which anti-Semitism represents."

While declaring that the establishment of the State of Israel tended to aggravate the political complexion of anti-Semitism, the report took no stand on the Palestine problem as such.

It pointed out, however, that "whatever position may be taken toward the establishment of a Jewish state and toward the rights and wrongs of Jews and Arabs and of the Hebrew Christians and Arab Christians involved. Churches are in duty bound to pray and work for an order in Palestine as just as may be in the midst of our human disorder; to provide within their power for the relief of victims of this warfare without discrimination, and to seek to influence the nations to provide a refuge for displaced persons far more generously than has yet been done."

In taking up the problem of Christian evangelization amo[illegible] the [illegible]

[illegible] cised the failure to maintain that mission in respect to the Jewish people.

The report closed with a series of recommendations encouraging Christians to seek "mutuality" contact with their Jewish neighbors urging churches to participate in agencies combatting misunderstanding and prejudice, and cautioning the churches to "scrupulously avoid all unworthy pressures or inducements in their mission work among Jews."

He protestingly told his questioners that they already had him out on the end of a plank.

Psychiatrist Was Also Noted Author

Dr. Abraham Myerson, sixty-six, neurologist and psychiatrist in Boston for many years, died at Brookline, Mass., in his home at 33 Taylor Crossway. A former clinical professor of psychiatry at Harvard, he was a witness at numerous trials involving the sanity of defendants, including that of Douglas Chandler, former Baltimore newspaper man who was convicted of treason last year and sentenced to life imprisonment for acting as a German radio commentator in the last war.

Dr. Myerson was a prolific researcher, writer and speaker. In 1938, when he was director of psychiatric research at Boston State Hospital, he was quoted as saying in New York City that city life, despite its tendency to develop neuroses and "hectic instability" was generally better than that in rural communities.

He denied making that printed statement and wrote, "There is nothing about city life which is on the whole totally superior to country life. Different qualities are bred in one than in the other, but not necessarily better or worse qualities."

Dr. Myerson, in 1923, forcibly administered food to Nicola Sacco, defendant in the famous Sacco-Vanzetti trial, thereby obliging him to give up a hunger strike. The incident took place in the Boston Psychopathic Hospital.

His book, "The Nervous Housewife," analyzed discontent in women, which the writer called an "occupational disease." It was published in 1920. Dr. Myerson wrote "Foundations of Personality," 1921; "Inheritance of Mental [illegible]eases," 1925, and "When Life [illegible]," 1928. In the la[illegible] [illegible]vised [illegible]

Nazi Loot Sale Fund To Bring Young To U.S.

With money collected from the sale of Nazi loot and from German assets, the International Refugee Organization expects to bring more than 500 children to the U.S., it was announced in New York by Abba Schwartz, IRO reparations director.

All the youngsters, Mr. Schwartz explained at the IRO's offices at 40 East Fortieth Street, are orphans or homeless children whose parents were persecuted as anti-Nazis. They will be brought to the U. S. under the care of the United States Committee for the Care of European Children. The sum of $500,000 already has been allocated to cover the costs of transferring the children and providing temporary care.

At present, Mr. Schwartz said, the children are in displaced persons camps in Austria, Germany and Italy or under the care of the Red Cross. The present grant, he added, is limited to assistance of German and Austrian non-Jewish children. Previously $5,000,000 was allotted to the Joint Distribution Committee and $7,000,000 to the Jewish Agency for Palestine.

Mr. Schwartz, who has now left

Charges U.S. Sides With To Block Israel Recogniti

Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, chairman of the American Section of the World Zionist Organization, said in New York that while the people and the army of Israel were strong "and their strength is increasing," they were restive under the current truce in the Holy Land.

The Zionist leader, who returned from Israel after attending sessions of the Actions Committee of the World Zionist Organization, was interviewed at the Israeli offices, 16 East Sixty-sixth Street. He declared there was a "grave skepticism" among the Israeli people concerning the truce because their direct approach to the Arab states for peace negotiations was rebuffed.

"If the Arab states are resolved, as they have proclaimed, never to recognize the State of Israel, what purpose is there in the prolongation of a truce which is becoming a severe drain upon the economy of the new state," Dr. Silver added.

The position of Count Folke Bernadotte, U. N. mediator, Dr. Silver maintained, "has likewise suffered a serious decline as a result of his shocking proposal to turn Jerusalem over to Abdullah as his capital, and as a result of his baffling and contradictory opinion on the subject of the immigration of men of mil[illegible]

A school where a thorough Hebrew and Yiddish education for boys and girls of seven and over will be given. This school will function five days per week, Sunday morning and Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday after public and high school hours. The younger children (beginners) attending from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. and the older children from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. Tuition fee: $72 per annum.

RELIGIOUS SCHOOL

Since the Sunday Religious School once a week has been found inadequate, it has been decided that in order to impart a better knowledge of Judaism, classes at the Religious School will be held three days a week, Sunday morning and Monday and Wednesday after public school or Sunday morning and Tuesday and Thursday after public school.

This school is open for boys of five and six years of age (pre-Talmud Torah) and for girls of all ages; also for boys who have passed their Bar Mitzvah and wish to continue their Jewish studies. No boy between the age of seven and thirteen will be permitted to attend the Religious School He must attend the Talmud Torah. Tuition fee: $40 per annum.

IMPORTANT

A snack of milk and cookies will be served at the Synagogue enabling students to go direct from their public and high school classes to the Talmud Torah and Religious School.

Parents who desire taxi transportation for their children from the public or high school they attend to the Talmud Torah and Religious School please communicate with the office at ORchard 2682.

Decay Of Manners And The Source

It is frequently complained that the young people of this day are sadly lacking in manners, says the London Jewish Chronicle. They elbow their way serenely ahead, often disregarding the elders who may impede their path. This plaint has always been heard in the land. In every generation, older people have condemned the lack of consideration and unhelpfulness of those younger than themselves. Even so, compared with the standards of even a few years back, the conduct of the modern young would seem to be extreme in its disregard of the convenience and comfort of others.

This may be because the last quarter of a century has seen one of the most important revolutions in human behaviour that has ever occurred. Children have ... that period been brought up totally "in reverse" so far as all the rules and precepts of former generations are concerned. They have not only been spared much of the correction and direction that was formerly considered vital to their good behaviour, but they have also been encouraged to follow their own inclinations, and have learnt to believe that not to do so is detrimental to their whole personality. This is the outcome of a deliberate and carefully-planned system of education for the young that has completely superseded the older notion of teaching young people "their manners."

How far did the old system work, and is modern youth necessarily any the worse for its different training? Certainly the parents and teachers of other days exercised much more influence and authority over the young. But much of the influence was of a prohibitory nature, and as soon as it was relaxed, some of the subjects of its care relapsed into far more dangerous courses of conduct than are usual in our times.

The fact that during the period of domination, young people were more disciplined, less noisy, and less obstreperous, often blinds us to the fact that the good behaviour of children at that time was imposed upon them and did not come spontaneously from within. And good manners, if they are to be achieved at all, must be the outward sign of a harmonious and well-regulated personality. If they are merely trappings, their very falsity will negate them.

All of this should not be taken, as it sometimes is taken, to mean that training is unnecessary and that young people can "bring themselves up." That is a lazy man's method that has been adopted on pseudo-scientific grounds in recent years.

The ultimate product of a human being is a long, tedious, and intricate process. The old manacles were a short-time device, they never really grappled with the problem, and they certainly failed to produce any constructive solution. The present manifestations are simply the result of knocking off the chains and not substituting any other kind of discipline.

In this respect the Jewish child has always been at an advantage. If his parents and teachers know their duty, he has a complete system of life which will free him from the need either of rigid rules or terrifying punishment. Derech Eretz, the basis of good Jewish behaviour, is the key to real manners, both in young and old. It is the expression of an inward sense of wise and approved regulations, in which the subject willingly and purposefully cooperates.

It is only by a very intense and enlightened system of Jewish education, extending to the smallest detail of daily life, that such a state can be attained. It certainly cannot be achieved by turning children out and letting them learn where and as they will.

First swimming pool in a YMHA, incorporated in the new building of the Philadelphia Hebrew Education Society, which opened in 1891, was designed primarily as a public bath.

EDDIE CANTOR BUYS BOY GIFT FROM REFUGEE AUNT

Stanley Brooks, of Dorchester, Mass., went to luncheon arranged by the Women's Division of the Combined Jewish Appeal of Boston to meet Eddie Cantor and receive a birthday gift in the name of the boy's aunt, Stella Meisner, a refugee now in France, whom he has never seen. The Cantor-Brooks story developed some three weeks ago while the noted comedian was surveying conditions of displaced Jews of Europe for the United Jewish Appeal.

On the outskirts of Paris, officials of the Joint Distribution Committee, which receives its funds from the Appeal, took Cantor on a tour of workshops supported by the agency. There are hundreds of these workshops on the Continent where surviving Jews of Hitlerism are gradually getting back on their feet. In one of these centers Eddie Cantor became interested in the fine handiwork of a middle-aged woman. He stopped to view her craftsmanship and began to chat with her.

Thus Mrs. Stella Meisner started to tell him about her relatives in the United States and especially about a nephew whom she had never seen. She begged Cantor to do something for her. Eddie readily agreed that he would do what he could. Mrs. Meisner asked him to take her money and buy her little nephew a birthday gift. He refused to accept any money.

"Don't worry," he told her, "we'll get Stanley a gift." That's how Eddie Cantor bought Stanley a wrist watch which he presented to the youngster at the luncheon.

CALVERT 1622 Famous Families YOUNG 1799

In 1818 John Young, Scottish immigrant, wrote "Letters of Agricola" to the press which were instrumental in stimulating agriculture in Nova Scotia. His two sons, Sir William and George Renny, lawyers and statesmen, were both members of the Executive Council and Speakers of the Assembly. George founded the newspaper "Nova Scotian" while Sir William became Premier of the Province and later Chief Justice, a position he held for twenty-one years. A notable record of a truly distinguished Canadian family.

Great Families Create Great Nations

Distinguished English Statesman and Secretary of State to King James I, Calvert, head of the famous Calvert family, founded pioneer colonies in Newfoundland and Maryland early in the 17th Century.

Calvert and his descendants encouraged their settlers to clear and cultivate their land. The Calvert family also introduced principles of freedom and tolerance, hitherto unknown in the New World. These Calvert ideals were perpetuated down through the succeeding generations of the Calvert family.

The family is the corner-stone upon which great nations are built. Let each of us promote within the great Canadian family, the [illegible] concepts of freedom and [illegible] pioneered by the Calvert family three hundred years ago.

I WANT TO KNOW...

Does a Mother need insurance?

Unless a husband and father is very well-to-do his wife should have her own insurance policy. If a mother dies when there are no funds available to pay a housekeeper, the home may be broken up and the children put out for adoption or sent to relatives. The answer is, "Yes, a mother needs life insurance." Make an appointment to talk things over with a Mutual Life of Canada representative today.

UNCLE ISRAEL AND THE OTHER ZANGWILLS

in the Alps. And in the summer he would put on his old raincoat over his bathing suit, and stride down the lane to plunge into the ... and swim strongly.

"...as Uncle Israel who first how to swim.

season of his own plays was the most tragic blunder Uncle Israel ever made. It cost him thousands of pounds, and his life. His nerves were torn to shreds. He quarrelled with the dramatic critics. He fought law-suits over stage scenery. He suffered from insomnia. He worried everyone dreadfully. My last memories of him are of a very weary man, thinner and frail-

... in a chaise longue in the sunshine. He drank hot water instead of tea. Nothing could relieve his terrible insomnia. He could find no rest. Then he went to a ... home.

The first of August, 1926 was a flawless summer day. I was on the croquet lawn at Far End with my cousins when a taxi brought my Aunt Edie back from the nursing home. The children rushed to ask her about their father.

After twenty years that moment is as poignant in my memory as if it had happened yesterday.

Auntie Leah tied a black sash round my white dress and a black ribbon round my shady hat. There was not much outward expression of sorrow. It went too deep for that. My cousin Peggy said to me: "If Daddy had lived he wouldn't have been able to do any more work."

We were still only children, not yet old enough to appreciate Israel Zangwill, much as we loved him. I had never thought that the flame would burn itself out so quickly, even though it had burned at both ends. But what a light it had given! How ironic that insomnia should turn into eternal sleep.

"Never forget," an old friend wrote, "that he is now one of the company of immortals."

And now, as I grow older, and read the works of Israel Zangwill, sometimes I think I feel the glow of a kindred spirit. But he knew worlds I can never enter. And I think of the rest of my Zangwill family, of Uncle Louis, Uncle Mark, Auntie Leah, of Israel's wife, Auntie Edie, still lovely in age, who slipped out of life on the eve of Victory Day. And it is borne in upon me as the years pass, that the generation of Zangwills, of which my mother, Dina, is now the only one left, possessed some magic quality of soul and intellect that we cannot repeat. Yet I am proud, because I am kin with them. Their glory has touched me, and as long as I live I shall carry a little of it in my heart.

CLASS IN COOKERY

one or one and one-half pounds chopped meat
one grated potato
one grated onion
two eggs, separated
one slice dry white bread, soaked one teaspoon baking powder
seasoning

Brown a sliced onion in fat, in the loaf tin in which meat will be baked. Add some boiling water to this to make a gravy before the meat is put in. There should be enough water to half cover meat. Mash and beat meat with a fork to make it light, with the remaining ingredients, except for egg-whites which are to be beaten stiff and added at the last. Bake covered in a moderate oven, for about one and one-half hours. Uncover to allow to brown, topping with a little fat.

Mrs. D. Halickman,
4785 Ridgevale Avenue, Montreal.

ROLLED STEAK

four thin slices shoulder steak three slices stale bread
two eggs
three tablespoonsful chicken fat
one pinch garlic salt
three-quarters cup water or tomato juice
one and one-half teaspoonsful salt one-quarter teaspoonful pepper three medium onions
one-half teaspoon paprika

Make dressing of bread which has been soaked in cold water containing one teaspoonful salt. Squeeze out all of the water, then mix in thoroughly the two eggs, pepper, one-half teaspoon salt, grated onion. Hammer steak well, and roll each slice around some of the dressing. Secure with tooth picks. Grate two medium onions. Fry in the chicken fat, then add garlic salt, one-half teaspoonful paprika, and rub over the rolls of steak. In a sauce pan heat the water of tomato juice, add the prepared steak and let stew over slow heat for at least an hour, then place under broiler in oven not too close to flame for ten minutes.

SEAWEED AND SALT

Seaweed and sea water have long been familiar sources of iodine. In regions where the people live largely on sea food and the atmosphere and drinking water are constantly receiving the iodine from the sea, the intake of iodine is presumably adequate and goitre is very rare. But in regions too remote or too mountainous to receive significant amounts of iodine from the sea, goitre is much more common. Especially in inland areas it is wise to use salt that is iodized, nutritionists say. Iodized salt is usually more expensive than common salt but care should be taken to use this variety at all times.

SKIN SANITATION

Industrial health experts estimate that every year more than one per cent of all workers suffer from occupational skin disease. Much of this is preventable and the majority of cases can be avoided by the maintenance of personal cleanliness. In those industries where occupational skin disease is a hazard, the difficulty may be overcome by providing adequate washroom facilities and proper skin cleaners. Active promotion of health habits will not only reduce the number of skin disorders in industry but will also result in higher standards in the home and community.

First association with the name Young Men's Hebrew Association was established in Baltimore in 1854.

Uncle Israel And The Other Zangwills

By Primrose Horn

I am told that when Uncle Israel first set eyes on me—I was a few days old—he said reassuringly to my mother, his younger sister, Dina Horn: "They improve, you know."

And as far back as I can remember the Zangwills strove diligently after my improvement. I found my three uncles, Israel, Mark and Louis Zangwill, rather too much for a little girl to live up to. From the first I took Uncle Israel's eminence very much for granted, for he had been famous long before I was born. When I went to stay at Far End, his house in Sussex, by the sea, at the far end of a lane—we knew it as "Sea Lane", but our friends in the village called it "Zangwill Lane"—it gave me no end of satisfaction to sit at his carved oak writing table, take his quill pen, and cover several sheets of his paper with a horrid scrawl which I assured everyone was a novel. I got I.Z.'s Secretary to type it, and when Uncle Israel read it he grinned broadly.

Although the Zangwills with the exception of Louis were all grey-haired when I was born, I never thought of them as old, as the only criterion of age by which I could judge was my Granny Zangwill, who was so much older. When other children told me I was "old fashioned" because I lived with "old people," I was indignant, but it was no doubt perfectly true.

Uncle Israel's fine silvery head, his face with its prominent arched nose, full sensitive lips and large brown eyes sparkling behind their spectacles had so much fascination for me that years later I was amazed to hear him described as "quaintly ugly."

To me, his small niece, he was not the great Zangwill, but my own Uncle Israel, and I loved him. I never knew him harsh. When I [illegible] would say to me: "I didn't do that when I was a little girl!" He had the dreamer's remoteness and a certain quality of unworldly innocence. His wife, Edith Zangwill, Professor Ayrton's daughter, also had something of this quality, a sweetness and single-mindedness that persisted all through her life. He called her "Una".

"O, for the simpler life," he wrote,
"For tents and starry skies,
And the dreams that brood and dance
In Una's eyes."

Another great influence in my early years was the Zangwills' elder sister, Leah, a motherly little spinster, who looked after us all. When she died, not quite ten years after Uncle Israel, Uncle Louis had inscribed on the marble slab that covers her grave:

"Her light shone under a bushel.
A few saw, and were illumined."

She was a little older than Israel, and had practically brought up my mother, who was by far the youngest.

Many of the quaint or strange stories in Israel's books were suggested by Leah, who used to tell him about all the curious things she came across. It was she who told him about a man she had met called Shoshi Shmendrik. That was how the name came into Children of the Ghetto.

There was an intense devotion among the Zangwill brothers and sisters. If Israel was a devoted brother, he was also a devoted son. Granny Zangwill received the fullest devotion from all her children. Her early life till her children grew up had been cruelly hard, and her children did their best to make it up to her afterwards.

I never knew Grandfather Zangwill, for he went to live in Palestine and died long before I was born. He was intensely devout, orthodox as his sons were heterodox, and it had been his wish to settle in Jerusalem even though it meant parting from his family. Uncle Israel visited him in the Holy Land, and my Grandfather was very proud of his famous son. When he heard that Israel was coming to visit him in Jerusalem his emotion was so great that he wrote: "I am [illegible] at [illegible] parting with him."

Granny Zangwill was as turbulent as her husband was tranquil. I was only six when she died, but my memory of her is vivid. She had always been charged with great vitality; a fiery little woman, slender and upright, with luxuriant white hair, and darkly smouldering eyes. Though I remember her only wearing black, I was told that she loved bright colours and jewels, entertainment and constant movement. Israel delighted her by giving her a diamond ring. Her sons and daughters took her to theatres. She had come to England from Poland, a penniless girl of fifteen. She was a dominating personality and by instinct a dramatic actress. She could recount an incident so graphically that you almost saw it.

She entered wholeheartedly into grandmotherhood. But Uncle Israel's children, Ayrton, Peggy and Oliver, were always with nurses and governesses, and she could not get at them as she would have liked. I was the first grandchild really accessible to her.

Uncle Mark painted a fine portrait of her which now hangs in my dining room.

It was the rich vitality of my grandmother Ellen Zangwill, and the scholarly, deeply religious solemnity of my grandfather, Moses Zangwill, who had come to London as a boy from Russia, that was miraculously fused in their children into the Zangwill genius. It was there in all of them. In Israel it dazzled like a many-faceted diamond. In Mark it sparkled too, but not with the same depth. In Louis it was serious, glowing and steady. He was a man of great intellectual integrity and sensitive artistic tastes. His rooms in the Temple were full of carved oak and polished silver and the walls were hung with Japanese prints. To-day his Japanese prints glow on my walls, and I wonder whether my arrangement of them would have satisfied his fastidious taste.

Leah and Dina, though completely overshadowed by their brothers also had the Zangwill and greatness of heart.

Granny, the Zangwill matriarch, gloried in her children and grandchildren. She loved life. She was very angry at having to die. She insisted on coming home from the nursing home where she was staying after her second serious operation. She came back to us with day nurse and a night nurse, and for several weeks she fought.

furious battle with death, Uncle Israel came to London and stayed in his rooms in the Temple, to be constantly with her. Then one day he and the others came down from her room, and I heard them say "It is all over." I burst into tears.

Uncle Israel couldn't bear to see me cry. He brought out a large silver coin and said: "Take the child away and buy her a doll."

The magic worked. My granny was dead, but my passion for dolls was still very much alive, and I trotted out with Auntie Leah to find consolation in a Japanese doll from the Oriental Emporium in the Kilburn High Road. That Geisha doll was afterwards always "Uncle Israel's doll."

Israel Zangwill's three children and I wrote and published a magazine which we called The Daring Dingo Weekly. We were the Daring Dingoes, a combination of highwaymen, cowboys and redskins. We were in fact the most awful nuisance, seizing captives, who might range from Uncle Israel himself to the French governess, tying them to trees in Uncle Israel's gardens, and demanding ha'penny ransoms, and leaping out at passers-by in Zangwill Lane.

My gentle-voiced Auntie Edie was sometimes very cross with us. But Uncle Israel humoured us up to a point. He even contributed some limericks specially written for us, about a doggie for our Daring Dingo Weekly. But I don't think we were as much impressed as we should have been to have our little stories appear in the same pages as Zangwill's work.

Uncle Israel's home, Far End, was to me the ultimate paradise. The heart and soul of the house was Uncle Israel's study, which ran from the front to the back, its wide windows overlooking the croquet lawn, which lay just across the lane in front. It was a lofty, airy, book-lined room in which dark, carved oak, soft blue upholstery and [illegible] small bust of Uncle Israel and a very natural statuette of him sitting in an armchair. My feet were tempted by the polished ladder-like stairway which led up to a little gallery and a curtained-in look-out post over the fields. From the gallery the view of the study below with its carved oak pictures and statuary had a fascination for me. And I could retire behind the curtains and sit at the little table and scribble, and no one need know I was up there.

The study door bore a special notice that no one was to "make a noise in the corridor" between certain hours. That meant chiefly us. The corridor led from the study to the nursery at the other end of the house, so they were well separated. Our fun was therefore chiefly confined to the gardens. There were trees to climb, and a special nest we had built in a tree top which could be reached by climbing up a rope, where I sometimes came to sit by myself. There was a tennis lawn, and a summer house where we opened a Daring Dingo Library, and charged our friends a ha'penny a week per volume. Oliver, the youngest, was like a little Tarzan in the branches of the trees. The daring way in which he used to swing from the branches by his feet often brought Uncle Israel away from his work.

I remember how once after a performance of The Tempest during one of the Shakespeare Festivals that used to be held yearly in the village, we three younger children capered on the lawn yelling, "Ban, Ban, Caliban!"

A storm broke and the rain came down. And immediately from his study Uncle Israel could be heard crying: "The children! The children are out in the rain!" And we were quickly rushed indoors.

The outstanding actor in these Shakespeare Festivals was Robert Speaight, then an Oxford undergraduate. He was a sensational Hamlet. And my cousin Peggy, Israel's daughter, Margaret Zangwill on the programme, was a sensational Ophelia. She was thirteen then. Her performance amazed everyone, Uncle Israel not the least. The following summer she was Ariel. She had a touch of the other-worldly quality They prophesied a future on the stage for her. But she had no [illegible] ambition.

[illegible] the train of mischievous spirits in The Tempest. Although he was the youngest, he was our natural leader. Uncle Israel was especially fond of him.

We produced our own private theatricals in the gardens of Far End. There was one grand Red Indian play we performed on the tennis lawn at Far End, that stands out in my memory. I wrote the play, but the hit of the show was Auntie Edie's little nephew, Barbara Ayrton Gould's son, Michael Ayrton Gould, now known as Michael Ayrton, and a celebrity in his own right. He was then about three years old.

The first play I was ever taken to see was Uncle Israel's Too Much Money. I was very small at the time. Most of the wit was completely over my head, but when the Poplar landlady got struck behind by a piece of tough steak I shrieked with laughter. We had a postcard a day or two later from Uncle Israel. He said the matinee had been on the dull side, and the performers' enthusiasm was flagging, till the moment of the steak-throwing, when a burst of childish laughter rang through the theatre, and "bucked up the actors."

I was taken to see many more of Uncle Israel's plays. Uncle Louis took me to see the "Melting Pot." And I clearly remember the "King of the Schnorrers," "Merely Mary Ann," and "The Cockpit."

Uncle Israel prided himself on being something of an athlete. He and Auntie Edie did a cycling tour states that this Government is very sincere and earnest about its intentions with regard to the State of Israel and will persuade them to sit down and negotiate.

"The American government has further denied passports to American citizens who desire to go to Israel. The feeling is prevalent that our State Department is again following the lead of the British colonial and foreign offices. There is, therefore, a growing concern as to the attitude of the United States delegation at the coming sessions of the United Nations in Paris."

The seventh volume of the trilingual Jewish Book Annual, which contains articles on English-Jewish, Yiddish and Hebrew literary productivity, literary anniversaries, bibliographies and trends in the United States, Palestine and Europe, is in the press and due for publication in September. The Jewish Book Council publishes the work. Publication of the book, which has articles in English, Hebrew, and Yiddish, is one of the literary and cultural activities of the Council which is sponsored by the National Jewish Welfare Board (JWB). The Council's aim in this project, as in its major event, Jewish Book Month, is to cultivate an all-year interest in the reading of Jewish books. Dr. Solomon Grayzel, editor of the Jewish Publication Society, is Council president. Abraham Duker, research consultant of the Training Bureau for Jewish Communal Service, is editor of the Book Annual's English section. Dr. Pinkhos Churgin, dean of the Teachers' Institute, of Yeshiva University, and Moshe Starkman, Yiddish journalist, are editors of the Hebrew and Yiddish sections respectively.

Says DP Lose Hope

The immediate need of expanding vocational rehabilitation programs for Europe's displaced Jews to stave off "mass tragedy and complete demoralization" was asserted in New York by Mrs. Ludwig Kaphan, president of Women's American ORT (Organization for Rehabilitation through Training).

Mrs. Kaphan, who recently visited ORT projects in England, France, Switzerland, Germany, Austria and Italy, said ration cards were being issued in Balkan countries only to skilled workers. The training of Jewish persons for manual skills in Rumania "is a matter of life and death," she said, adding that similar conditions existed in other countries within the Soviet orbit.

In pointing out that a "profound sense of disappointment had replaced the intense joy" of the Jews in Europe at the time of the establishment of Israel, Mrs. Kaphan maintained that homeless Jews "are in grave doubt" about emigrating to Israel or other friendly countries.

Recent immigration legislation passed in the U. S. has "blighted the hopes of those who are seeking haven in this country," she said, adding that recurring anti-Semitic tension in Central Europe made the situation of many Jews there "intolerable."

Mrs. Kaphan announced that her organization was seeking 100,000 members, needed to expand ORT's network of vocational retraining centers. ORT derives part of its funds for its activities from the United Jewish Appeal's campaign for $250,000,000.

Mrs. Kaphan said she would confer with Senator Alban W. Barkley and Representative Sol Bloom on recommendations for legislation to facilitate entry to America of ORT-trained Jewish refugees.

Rabbi Nathan Baruch, director of the Vaad Hatzala Rehabilitation Committee's work in Germany, said that American occupation officials are "less concerned" than formerly with the plight of 120,000 Jewish displaced persons still in the American zone.

Rabbi Baruch returned from a three-year stay in Germany aboard a Pan American World Airways plane at La Guardia Field. The twenty-seven-year-old rabbi said official American interest in the D. P.s began falling off in the middle of 1947. Now, he said, officials "are primarily more interested in the German economy and the rebuilding of Germany."

A friend in need...

An important weight in the balance of nature is the Prairie Chicken. By destroying weed seeds, grasshoppers and other insects, it makes the farmer's work easier and more profitable . . . it helps protect the food you eat.

The Prairie Chicken is a fine game-bird too. Given fair protection, it thrives near farms and towns and can contend with its natural enemies. But bush-fires and over-hunting are two enemies it cannot successfully fight against. The Prairie Chicken needs our help in reducing these threats to its survival.

The Heath Hen, a close relative of the Prairie Chicken, has been extinct since 1933. The forces that exterminated the Heath Hen can destroy the Prairie Chicken unless we act now to protect it.
